

Copy Right and Fair Use

As a student enrolled in this course, you are advised that many of the images presented here may have copyright protection.

United States Law provides limited use of copyrighted materials for educational and non-profit use under the established doctrine of "Fair Use," as well as other provisions in copyright law. The images used in my "Academic Web Site" or through Blackboard are intended to be used strictly for my students' educational benefit and the betterment of the students' academic progress and their eventual benefiting of society at large.

In order to maintain strict adherence to the spirit of the law, I only allow students currently enrolled in classes with me to use the resources available on my Academic Web Site, and the resources are password protected. Students may not to share visual or audiovisual resources or links outside of their classes with me during the time that the class is running, nor after it has terminated. In this way, we can all keep safely within the law and use one of it's intended purpose for precisely for what it was designed: Your Educational Betterment.

By using the visual and audiovisual resources on this site, you agree to not share links or resources outside of this class.

Resources are available at left if you would like to explore the doctrine of "Fair Use" and the other provisions for education further.

Digital Media Law Project

<http://www.dmlp.org/legal-guide/fair-use>